In the previous campaign, you fought as the Tech-Priests of the Imperium, defending the remote military research facility. There you were first initiated into the secrets of the artefact, which was unknown to the Imperium for a long time. Now you are transported to the inner world of the Kharon. Your mission is to secure the precious cargo of the Kharon. There are few ways into the Kharon, and fewer still to get out again. The Kharon is guarded by the Brotherhood of Steel, the greatest defense force of the Imperium. To the South-East of the facility is the sea. As you are starting from the main entrance of the facility, your immediate goal is to reach the rooms with the testing artefacts. To get to these rooms, you must fight your way through a large and apparently endless maze of black, metal doors and corrupted parts of dead robots. By taking the correct paths, you will be able to dodge traps and overcome enemies. Along the way, you will meet new and more aggressive enemies. In the last room, you will have to fight a boss. Warhammer 40000Mechanicus - That's what you thought. This game is just a Warhammer 40000 40k arcade 2d game. What is it good for? Nothing! Warhammer 40000Mechanicus-CODEX. Nov 15. 2. Augment. Flesh is weak! Upgrade your Tech-Priests with weapons, support items, Servo-Skulls and other armoury. The last campaign sees the continuation of the storyline from the previous one. The objective is the same as in the previous mission - the tech-priest needs to get to the testing artefact. You will face the Brotherhood of Steel, new and more dangerous enemies. The main new thing is that the facility is guarded by a new type of enemy - Ironhand Assault Troopers. They are even more dangerous than the previous types of elite troops, and you will have to watch out for the Marines as well. In the previous campaign, you fought
